precedes the title page. In the third century, when these codes were generalized, the parchment codes began to be popular. A code (in modern use) is the first deposit of information that people recognize as "book": uniform uniform uniforms in some way along one of the edges, and are usually kept between two covers made in a more robust material. You are reading a free preview, pages 738 to 791 are not shown in this preview. The papyrus became difficult to find because of the lack of contacts with the ancient Egypt and the scroll, which for centuries had remained at the bottom, became the main writing material. The development of communication technology: oral tradition, handwritten culture, the culture of the press, was information. In theory, in Egypt, a land rich in the papyrus plant, the Papirace Code should have reigned supreme, but it was not so: the parchment code appears in the area at the same time as the papyrus, in the second century AD. Although the eleven codes of the Bible dated in that century were Papyraci, there are about 18 codes of the same century with pagan writings and four of these are in parchment. [19] In addition, an interesting letter is provided by a letter from the time, which is found in an Egyptian village: a son writes to the father that "Deios came to us and showed us the six codes of parchment".
